IN HIS CUPS

Old boy Al is hitting the hard cider trail again. A couple of drinks and he is dreaming about prehistoric times.

He sees himself riding an elephant and making whoopee with a cave girl. He dreams of their petting party, which is rudely interrupted, when a hairy ape steals the girl. He browses over the fight he has with the ape and when he is getting the worst of it, the cave girl wallops the ape. His last recollection is of the girl's cool hands smoothing his bruised face.

But alas, what seems to be a beauty's hands is only a cow's tongue. Awakened and provoked, Al chases old Bossy away as he, like Aesop, cries:-

"GIVE US LIFE, LIBERTY AND PURSUIT OF FLAPPERS ".
